2666 by Bolano, Roberto (HB/DJ) VERY GOOD ~ FREE SHIP

This book is in VERY GOOD, preowned condition. The only issues are some wear to corners of the dust jacket (esp on front -- see pics 2 and 3) and a smudge on the outer pages going lengthwise (see 2nd to last pic). Otherwise, there are no issues: no tears, stains, rips, writing, or any damage to the pages, cover, or spine. I am very picky about the condition of the books that I sell and try to be very thorough about the exact condition when listing them. The pictures that you see are of the book you will actually get, so you don't have to guess at the condition!

Please take a look at my pictures and feel free to message me with any questions you might have and/or if you would like to see additional pictures. Be assured this book will be packaged very carefully (see my feedback) and in the exact condition you see in the pictures. Thanks for taking a look!

Three academics on the trail of a reclusive German author, a New York reporter on his first Mexican assignment, a widowed philosopher, a police detective in love with an elusive older woman—these are among the searchers drawn to the border city of Santa Teresa, where over the course of a decade hundreds of women have disappeared.

ROBERTO

was born in Santiago, Chile, in 1953. He spent much of his adult life in Mexico and in Spain, where he died at the age of fifty. His novel The Savage Detectives was named one of the best books of 2007 by The Washington Post, the Los Angeles Times, and The New York Times Book Review.

"Not just the greatest Spanish-language novel of this decade, but one of the cornerstones that define the entire literary canon."

—J. A. Masoliver Ródenas,
LA VANGUARDIA (Barcelona)

"A masterpiece... Bolaño borrows from vaudeville and the campus novel, from noir and pulp, from science fiction, from the bildungsroman, from war novels; the tone of his writing oscillates between humor and total darkness, between the simplicity of a fairy tale and the false neutrality of a police report."

sponded. For a few days, Inspector José Márquez investigated some of the patrons but didn't come up with anything.

Two weeks later, in May 1994, Mónica Durán Reyes was kidnapped on her way out of the Diego Rivera School in Colonia Lomas del Toro. She was twelve years old and she was a little scatterbrained but a good student. It was her first year of secondary school. Both her mother and father worked at Maderas de México, a maquiladora that built colonial-style furniture that was exported to the United States and Canada. She had a younger sister who worked at a maquiladora that made linings, a sixteen-year-old brother who worked with his parents at Maderas de México. Her body appeared two days after the kidnapping, alongside the Santa Teresa-Pueblo Azul highway. She was dressed and next to her was her schoolbag full of books and notebooks. According to the forensic examination, she had been raped and strangled. In the subsequent investigation, some friends said they had seen Mónica get into a black car with tinted windows, maybe a Peregrino or a MasterRoad or a Silencioso. It didn't look as if she was taken by force. She had time to scream, but she didn't scream. When she saw one of her friends, she even waved goodbye. She didn't seem to be afraid.

In Colonia Lomas del Toro once again, a month later, the body of Rebecca Fernández de Hoyos, thirty-three, was found. She had long dark hair down to her waist, and she had been a waitress at El Catrín, a bar on Calle Xalapa, in nearby Colonia Rubén Darío. Previously she had worked at the Holmes & West and Aitwo maquiladoras, where she was fired for trying to organize a union. Rebecca Fernández de Hoyos was from Oaxaca, although she had been living in the north of Sonora for more than ten years now. When she was eighteen, she had lived in Tijuana, where she appeared on a register of prostitutes, and she had made several unsuccessful attempts to settle in the United States, brought back to Mexico four times by the migrá. Her body was discovered by a friend who had a key to her house and was surprised Rebecca hadn't come in to work at El Catrín, because, as she stated later, the deceased was a responsible woman and missed work only when she was sick. The house, according to her friend, was the same as always, or in other words at first glance she didn't see anything to suggest what she was doing. It was a small house, with a living room, kitchen, bathroom, and a bedroom. When she went into the bathroom, she discovered her friend's body, which was sprawled on the floor as if Rebecca had fallen and knocked herself on the head, though there was no blood. Only when she tried to revive her, putting water on her face, did she realize that Rebecca was dead. She called the police and the Red Cross from a public phone and then she went back to the house, moved her friend's body to the bed, sat in one of the two armchairs in the living room, and watched a TV show while she waited. The Red Cross came much more quickly than most, and the other about forty-five, who might have been his father, said in the bathroom. There were two medics, one of them very young, twenty, and the older man who told her where she'd found the body and the dead woman by the feet as he lifted her by the shoulders, returning her to the original scene of death. Then the medic asked her what position she had found her friend in: sitting on the toilet, propped against it, on the floor, huddled in a corner? She turned off the TV and came to the door of the bathroom and gave instructions until the two men had left. Rebecca just as she'd found her. The three of them stared from the doorway. Rebecca seemed to be drowning in a sea of white tiles. When they were tired of the sight or felt queasy, they sat down, she in the armchair and the medics at the table, and lit some cigarettes that the medic took out of the back pocket of his pants. You must be used to this, she said, somewhat incoherently. That depends, said the medic, who didn't know whether she was talking about the cigarettes or about hauling dead and injured people every day. The next morning the medical examiner wrote in his report that the cause of death had been strangulation. The dead woman had had sexual relations in the hours before her murder, although the examiner couldn't certify whether she'd been raped or not. Probably not, he said when a final opinion was demanded. The police tried to arrest her lover, a man by the name of Pedro Pérez Ochoa, but when they at last found where he lived, a week later, the person in question had been gone for days. Pedro Pérez Ochoa lived at the end of Calle Sayuca, in Colonia Las Flores, in a shack built, rather skillfully, of adobe and bits of trash, with room for a mattress and a table, a few yards from the waste pipe of the EastWest maquiladora, where he had worked
